A Questionnaire to Determine High-Functioning Alcoholism: Am I an Alcoholic?

by Louisville Addiction Treatment Center | May 23, 2023

Addiction can be a challenging and isolating struggle, but it is important to remember that you are not alone. If you are seeking addiction treatment in Louisville, Kentucky, there is hope.

Alcoholism is a major issue affecting millions of people worldwide, but not all alcoholics fit the stereotypical image. High-functioning alcoholics (HFAs) are individuals who appear to be successful and live a normal life while still dealing with an uncontrolled drinking problem.

As this type of alcoholism can often go unnoticed by friends and family, it's important to understand how HFAs are different from more traditional forms of alcoholism so those affected—or their loved ones—can recognize the signs early on and seek help.

To that end, we have developed a questionnaire meant to evaluate whether someone may have HFA or could benefit from treatment. The Questionnaire to Determine If You Are a High-Functioning Alcoholic Alcoholism can manifest itself in various ways, and it's not always easy to recognize the signs of problem drinking. That's why researchers and healthcare professionals have developed a questionnaire to determine whether someone might have a drinking problem, even if they appear to be functioning well in their everyday lives.

This survey, geared towards identifying high-functioning alcoholics, asks a series of questions about an individual's drinking habits, social life, and behavior changes related to drinking, among other things.

While completing the questionnaire may not lead to an immediate diagnosis, it can certainly help shed light on whether you might need to consider changes to your relationship with alcohol.

Questionnaire

1. Do you drink more than you intend to on a regular basis?

2. Do you ever feel guilty about your drinking?

3. Do you ever drink in the morning?

4. Do you ever drink alone?

5. Do you ever drink to escape from your problems?

6. Do you ever black out from drinking?

7. Do you ever have trouble remembering what happened while you were drinking?

8. Do you ever make excuses for your drinking?

9. Do you ever miss work or school because of your drinking?

10. Are your relationships suffering because of your drinking?

If you answered yes to any of these questions, it's important to speak with a healthcare professional and discuss potential treatment options. High-functioning alcoholism can be a serious issue that requires help from trained professionals in order to keep it under control.

What is High-Functioning Alcoholism and How Does It Differ from Other Types of Alcoholism

High-functioning alcoholism is a term used to describe individuals who are able to maintain their daily responsibilities and remain successful in their professional and personal lives, while still struggling with alcohol addiction.

These individuals may appear to have their lives together on the surface, but may still be facing severe consequences related to their drinking. Unlike other types of alcoholism, high-functioning alcoholics may not exhibit the typical signs of addiction, such as a loss of control or inability to quit drinking.

This type of alcoholism can be particularly challenging to identify and treat, as individuals with high-functioning alcoholism may not seek help until they experience a significant crisis. To truly address high-functioning alcoholism, it is important to understand the unique struggles and barriers facing these individuals.

Signs and Symptoms of High-Functioning Alcoholism

High-functioning alcoholism is a condition that is often overlooked due to the ability of individuals to hold down jobs, maintain relationships, and appear to function normally on the surface. However, this form of alcoholism can be just as damaging as other forms of substance abuse. Signs and symptoms may include:

- Drinking alone
- Drinking more alcohol than intended or for longer periods of time than intended
- Repeatedly trying to cut down on drinking or stop drinking altogether, but being unsuccessful
- Spending a great deal of time drinking or recovering from the effects of drinking
- Having strong cravings or a strong urge to drink
- Drinking in situations that are dangerous, such as while driving or operating machinery
- Continuing to drink despite negative consequences, such as job loss or relationship problems
- Experiencing blackouts or memory loss due to heavy drinking
- Making a ritual out of drinking, such as always having a drink at a certain time or place
- Hiding alcohol in order to drink in secret
- Feeling guilty or ashamed about one's drinking
- Using alcohol as a coping mechanism for anxiety or stress
- Increased tolerance to alcohol
- Shifting focus on social events that involve drinking

It is important to recognize the signs and symptoms of high-functioning alcoholism and seek help before it leads to serious health problems or affects other aspects of an individual's life.

Advice on Getting Help With High-Functioning Alcoholism

High-functioning alcoholism can be a tricky disorder to tackle alone, and seeking help is a huge and important step toward recovery. It's important to remember that there is no shame in asking for help and seeking the support of a professional can make all the difference on your journey.

Finding a trustworthy therapist or counselor can provide you with the necessary tools and resources to get back on track and move towards a healthier lifestyle. Additionally, attending support groups or seeking out a sobriety coach can offer a sense of community and accountability.

Remember, recovery is a process and everyone's journey is unique. Taking the first step towards help can be daunting, but it's a brave and necessary action towards a better future.

Different Types Of Treatment For Alcoholism

Traditional Alcoholism Treatment

Traditional alcoholism treatment typically involves some form of detoxification, followed by inpatient or outpatient rehabilitation.

Detoxification is the process of allowing the body to rid itself of alcohol, which can be a dangerous and potentially life-threatening process. Rehabilitation involves counseling and therapy to help the individual learn to cope with their addiction and make positive lifestyle changes.

Holistic Alcoholism Treatment

Holistic alcoholism treatment focuses on treating the whole person, rather than just the addiction. This approach typically includes a combination of traditional and alternative therapies, such as acupuncture, yoga, and meditation.

The goal of holistic treatment is to help the individual find balance in their life and develop coping mechanisms to deal with stress and triggers.

12-Step Alcoholism Treatment

12-step alcoholism treatment is based on the 12 steps of Alcoholics Anonymous (AA). AA is a fellowship of individuals who share their experience, strength, and hope with each other to recover from alcoholism.

The 12 steps are designed to help individuals achieve sobriety and live a life free from addiction.

Medication-Assisted Alcoholism Treatment

Medication-assisted alcoholism treatment involves the use of medication along with counseling and therapy to treat addiction.

Medications used in this type of treatment include naltrexone, acamprosate, and disulfiram. These medications can help to reduce cravings and withdrawal symptoms, making it easier for individuals to abstain from alcohol
